

Mr. and Mrs. Mannes
In First Sonata Recital*By Sylvester Rawling.

Mr. and Mrs. David Mannes, presenting the first of their season's violin and piano sonatas recitals in Aeolian Hall last night, are to be congratulated upon a programme that gave rare pleasure to an audience large in size and fine in quality. It consisted of Beethoven's sonata in G major, opus 96, Locatelli's sonata in F minor, and Brahms' trio in E flat major, for piano, violin and horn. In the latter the assisting artist was Joseph Franz, first horn player of the Symphony Orchestra.

The satisfying co-operation in the playing of Mr. and Mrs. Mannes, to which we are accustomed, was typified in their suave exposition of the Beethoven number, but the melodious Locatelli composition gave opportunity to notice especially the rich, full tones that Mr. Mannes gets out of the violin and the soundness of his musicianship. Mr. Franz proved worthy of association with the two more familiar artists. The innate beauty of the trio found adequate expression.

Tom Dohmen, at the Punch and Judy Theatre this afternoon, gives one of his odd song recitals. French, German and English composers, himself among the latter, are on his programme. He plays his own accompaniments.

"BAD EYE" BELIES
NAME IN CARD GAME

Accused of Cheating, He Uses Pistol, Sends Two to Hospital, and Escapes.

An all-night card game in the flat of Antonio Rosaro, at No. 192 Johnson Street, Brooklyn, came to a sudden end shortly before 7 o'clock this morning when "Bad Eye" Salvatore was accused of cheating. He drew a revolver and shot John Gest, a waiter, on No. 190 Navy Street, and Vincenzo Ingletto, a restaurant keeper, of No. 158 Navy Street, when he escaped through a rear window.

The shots were heard by Patrolman Sharlow of the Adams Street Station, and he hurried to the house and found the wounded man. In a rear yard he found the revolver they said Salvatore had used with two empty cartridges in it. Gest and Ingletto were taken to Brooklyn Hospital, where it was noted that Gest had lodged in the back of his head and his condition is critical. Ingletto escaped with a wound in the left arm.
